By Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey.

it with savage fury and clouds of

It seemed to Craddock as they rock; but he never looked astern. He Then came the mighty boom o keeled over to starboard until her Twenty minutes later the sloop was the rushing wind above them and the booming of the water against the western extremity of the rock to remind them of the perils through

While the storm raged on and daylight became smothered by advancing night, they cooked and ate their supper, and smoked their pipes in tranquil security. Why they were where the North sea, does not matter, but if a coast guard, or a customs officer that were stored away in secret lockers aboard the sloop, he might have called them by the now almost ob-colete term, smugglers. Ostensibly, however, the sloop was nothing more than a mere pleasure boat, and they, two ventursome sailers, who found it possible to navigate a craft which ordinarily should have carried a crew

When morning same the storm had increased in violence, and so mighty were the seas which swept before it that not infrequently clouds of spray and masses of water leaped over the summit of the rock, to again fall into the sea many fathoms to leeward. The rushing of the wind, split tered them, came together again beyond the Devil's Nose with a noise

After they had disposed of their coffee, he who had held the helm through the storm of the preceding night, and brought the sloop safely into this strange retreat, said to his companion, while they stood together

"Craddock, this pile of nature's masonry contains the unwritten epi-taphs of thousands who have perished here. It has other secrets, too, and one of them I have discovered, and will show you. Do you think, if we climb to the summit yonder, that you can keep your hold upon the slippery Craddock shrugged his shoulders, and, without reply, turned toward the dingey which had already been launched and was moored on the port the Devil's Nose. Two-thirds of the distance to the summit they came upon a level space no bigger than a dining table, which in the center was cleft apart, leaving a space not more than two feet wide and as dark as midnight within; and into this forbidding place the big man, without explanation or hesitation, dropped.

Craddock followed, and a moment later they stood in a natural cavern that was created when the rock was "I doubt," said the leader, "if there lives another man today who knows of the existence of this cavern. Hark!

Do you hear that whistling moan? It is like the vibration of a hundred aeolian harps. I have a lantern here; wait til I strike a light and I will show you something grander than you ever saw before." Then, presently he led the way up the slippery rock, and as they advanced, the weird moaning and whistling became louder and shriller, until it seemed as if around them and thricking in their ears. It was the voice of the gale as it rushed through an opening in the rock high over their heads; and after they had mounted to it. Craddock

The wind struck them like a blow and for a moment forced them back presently stood upon a ledge formed left in the mighty mass, with the summit of the Devil's Nose scarce

The view was grand and awful,

The storm was at its height. Black clouds rushed toward them and above them like chargers of a Hadean host.

with white foam tumbled onward in three fathoms above their heads.

rock against the gale?"

of four or five.

like distant thunder.

at the bow.

which they had just passed.

ler was strong, tried and sure.

(Copyrighted, 1900, by F. V. R. Dey.)

There is no place in all the world | tain in the life of a sailor as ruleo desolate, particularly when a nor - ning straight before a gale of wiad vest gale had been on the rampage Billows, like mountains tower in or three successive days, lashing the front and rear up out of the ocean's ea into a fury of foam and turmoil, depth astern, making destruction ap is that part of the North sea where pear inevitable. And there is an angry t washes against the western coast swish and a resentful seething in the of the peninsular of Denmark. At rushing water as it litts the stern such times the air is frost laden and on high and hurls the errfr like ar penumbing, even in midsummer. The like an arrow from a bow before it water itself is of an ominous, leaden But neither of these men seemed to int, like a battleship with her war- realize the danger they were in, or it paint on. Even the foam which caps they realized it, they were careless the waves is not white and flaky as concerning it. And while he at the t is in the southern zones, but seems stern stood with feet apart, his right to have been adulterated with some | hand grasping the tiller and his left refuse tint suggestive of the dirty firmly holding the straining sheet. suds of wash-day. The wind is as Craddock prepared himself for the erratic as the waves which chop leap he was to make, upon the sucunmercifully: it howls and shricks cess of which their safety depended. and roars with deadly energy for a From a small thing in the distance, time and then moans sufferly while the Devil's Nose boomed greater and it generates new force for a more fu- mightier as they advanced. It seemrious onslaught. Deep-sea sailors ed to be rushing toward them at dread this region and avoid it when fearful speed, growing taller and they can, but the amphibious Norwe- mightier, and more ominous as it gian and the storm-born Dane love approached. The waves beat against it as a savage loves the wilderness. If you should study one of the older spray and chunks of water were charts of this bad-tempered sea you hurled almost to the summit. would discover that fifty-two miles off the coast of Denmark, by the com- drove onward, as if his friend was pass north-northwest from Tyboron, steering straight for the forbidden there looms a rock with an unpronouncable Danish name, which, being knew that the hand that held the til translated into English means the Devil's Nose. At the present time it has disappeared, for upon it had the maddened waters against the bar stranded so many vessels and to it | rier of rock and the yacht was enwas due the loss of so many lives veloped in a shower of foam and mist and so much property that the Dan-through which, half obscured, the ish and the German governments uni- black monument towered. The helmsted to destroy it. It is not located man released his hold upon the sheet on the charts in use today and the the boom flew forward with a sudden deepest draught war vessel may now erash against the shrouds, the sloop pass over the spot in safety.

Originally it loomed 64 feet into deek was half submerged in water the air, and from the westward had and she came about like the snapthe appearance of a huge nose, the ping of a whip. It was at that inmore so when the tide was low, for stant that Craddock made his leap. then at the water's edge could be seen indentations that had been safely moored within the little bay, ground out by centuries of pounding, which was as placid as a mill pond, waves, and these cavities were the and the two men were snug in the nostrils of this mammoth proboscis, cabin with nothing but the roar of To the eastward it extended from the summit to the water at an angle of 23 degrees. This part of the rock was concave in form, and it broadened as it descended until it finally disappeared beneath the water like the tines of a pitchfork, leaving a sheltered bay about fifty feet in length by 30 in breadth, and as deep as the sea itself. Many a belated eraft returning from a fishing voyage they were overtaken by a furious and overtaken by a furious nor'west. gale in the most dangerous part of er, found shelter here before the rock was destroyed, and in the little bay, rode out the gale in safety; and it could have inspected the articles was just such an oceasion as this which one afternoon in August com-

Approaching the "Devil's Nose."

a sloop-rigged craft, to seek the lit

The gale had come upon them almost without warning. They had reefed and double reefed their sails, but the wind, as if it enjoyed their discomfiture, increased its strength in proportion as they reduced the resistance to it, so that at last they side of the sloop. They sculled it were obliged to send before it, with quickly to the head of the bay, and only sail enough left standing to give soon began the precarious ascent of them steerage way.

his grasp.

dock," said the big man at the helm, time. Pass the sheet to me. I can hold it with my left hand. Now take the heaving line and go forward. Make one end fast to the capstan, tie the other end around your wrist, and bit more. There is an iron ring set it before the line pulls taut, we will grasp, and he was led around a jutin time, cut yourself adrift and swim again, but they held their ground and you. Go forward now! Not a word!

the summit of a wave Craddock, from his position at the bow, could see the huge rock to which his companion had referred. He had heard him describe it many times, but he had never seen it before.

was seized again with crushing force, the King of Denmark." and the voice of his friend, but faint- When Craddock returned to the ly heard above the tempest, shouted | deck, he found his triend stretched neath torrents of water that fell upon eyes upon his friend, and said; her from the pursuing waves and again appearing like a helpless chip

She seemed to be making straight saved the life of a daughter of the for the Devil's Nose. Upon her deck King of Denmark, nearer, Craddock's companion again shouted in his ear:

"I know her, Crad. It is the favo- Yes, I am glad of that." fothoms from the rock.

"He is a Norwegian, madam; by not less passion than his friend, and "Well named," she murmured, "A rm arethedw usoo eidle, aeein w atl Norwegian Thor. Tell him that he while he stood entranced, his arm has saved the life of a daughter of at full length at the bow, lying upon "Look yonder, Crad! Look there!" his back, with his eyes fixed upon and with his disengaged hand he the coursing clouds, and there was an indescribable smile upon his face. Scarcely a mr away and driving He seemed to have forgotten that he toward them with the speed of a lo- was bedraggled and wet, and that comotive, was a schooner yacht under his tawny hair and beard were matted bare poles, rolling and pitching and and unkempt, and as Craddock paustossing, now half submerged be- ed beside him, he turned his big blue

"Who is she, Craddock?" "She told me," said Craddock calmupon the summit of an angry sea. | ly, in reply, "to tell you that you had a dozen forms were visible, lashed | The Norwegian did not immediateto their places to prevent being swept | ly respond. There was a dreamy, faraway look in his eyes, and presently "The daughter of a king. I am glad of that. The daughter of a king.

He ceased speaking, rose slowly to may not be aboard it now. She loves friend, said in that same half-dreamy have grave misgivings. I wish that ber that I laughed and told her to and frequently he ran his fingers through the wavy, tawny masses of his hair, as if by doing so some obstacle to collected reflection might be John Hupkins Party Arrives at dispelled. Craddock also seemed distraught. He kept his place at the bow and gazed, not at the sea, as did his friend, but upward, toward the summit of the Devil's Nose, and there was anger in his eyes and Preparations Already Under Way so That Nothmeans in the expression of his face. At last Thor drew near to him again. "I cannot help it. Craddock," he said, as if in continuation of a discussion between them. "I cannot help it, my friend. I love her. Yes, and she loves me. It was her soul that cried aloud to me from the sea when I tsood up there on the rock and eclipse stations for the United State heard and answered and obeyed. What Naval Observatory. It is a town consist since she came to us I believe that I too, am of royal blood? You are angry because you know I love this princess. "No, Ralph," and Craddock turned and faced his friend. "I am not an gry; that is not the world; but I you had not taken me to the summit of the rock."

The broad shoulders of the Norwe gian gave expression to a shrug. He raised his head proudly, and smiled at the clouds, the sky, and the world around him.

"I did not take you there, old chap," he said. "She called to me, and I went, although I did not know that she called. Blame destiny-not me. I am going to her now."

He strode away without another word, paused at the hatchway and and said:

"May I enter, princess?" Again they faced each other in the shallow cabin scarce higher than knew each other then, and doubtless, loved. Today, mayhap after cycles of time which destiny cannot count, have come and gone, they meet again and remember. Have I spoken truth, princess?"

"Yes, God's truth," she murmured. He bent over her white hands and touched first one and then the other with his lips.

"That destiny which shapes our ends, in whose control our entities are as mere feathers in a gale, brought us through the tempest, face | that the men whom he found it necessary to face, and you Carlotta-you see I to select to assist in the spectroscopic know your name-and you and I. work at the Naval Observatory stations will remember and will live up to were all Johns Hopkins men. this hour, henceforth. Some day not say more than I have said."

ed, and looked, and looked. She did on May 28th, the date of the eclipse. not speak; there was no need. And while their souls communed together in silence, Craddock leaped into the hatchway and called aloud:

"Sail, ho!" Once more the Norwegian touched the forehead of the princess with his lips, and then, he left her and hastened to the deck. Not three miles away to the eastward, a Danish cruiser was steaming towards them. Craddock was at the stern of the sloop wildly gesticulating to attract the attention of those upon the ship of war, and from the starboard bow there presently issued a puff of smoke followed by a distant report, and the cruiser glided into the less tumultuous waves beneath the shelter of the Devil's Nose. Davits swung outward, a cutter dropped into the sea, was manned and presently pulled under the stern of the sloop. The cruiser has been sent from Tyboron in search of the belated yacht of the Princess Charlotte.

Twenty minutes later the princess had departed. The cruiser, with black smoke spouting from her funnels, was coursing with all speed for Denmark with the joyous news of the princess' safety; and Thor stood silently leaning against the tiller of the sloop, with one hand shading his eyes, watching the warship while she be came smaller in the distance. Presently he turned and motioned to Craddock to come nearer. Then, resting one hand upon the shoulder o flis friend, he said, slowly: "The daughter of a king, Craddock, but only a woman after all. I love her, and she loves me; and were she the daughter of a hundred kings, she were no less mine. The daughter of a king, Craddock, but also the sweetheart of Thor, the Norwegian.

(The End.)

NO RIGHT TO UGLINESS.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be atractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at all drug stores.

When age bring a woman wisdom she begins to sit with her back to the light. "OPPORTUNITY IS THE CREAM OF

TIME.

Now is your opportunity. There is no time when the system is so much in need of a good medicine, like Hood's Sarsaparilla, and no time when it is so susceptible to the benefits to be derived J. G. Ball, Raleigh, N. C.; C. C. Thom from such a medicine. By purifying, enriching and vitalizing the blood and ton-

Constipation is cured by Hood's Pills.

mark. His strong and noble face wore an expression of introspection which could not be confounded with anxiety Pinehurst, N. C.

ing Will be Lacking to Take the Results Successful.

(Special Dispatch to Baltimore Sun.) Pinehurst, N. C., May 16,-This situation in the pine barrens of North Caralina was selected weeks ago as one of the matter if she is the daughter of a in of many cottages and two hotels, all king? Do you know, Craddock, that being the property of Mr. Tufts, of Boston. The place is one of the many winter resorts recently developed in the

Through the kindness of Mr. Tufts and his local manager, Mr. Benbow, several cottages have been kept open after the closing of the regular winter season to as to accommodate the eclipse observer With the exception of these the town is practically deserted.

The situation in every respect is an ideal one for the purpose in the minds of then ewly arrived party. The climate seems to be all that is desired, there are no woods or buildings to obscure the view of the sun and there are no curious persons to hinder the work or to get in the way on the eventful morn-

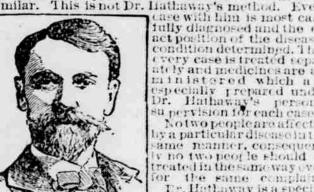

The location was selected by Professor Skinner, of the Naval Observatory. Under his able direction the erection of the necessary buildings has already proceeded rapidly, and nearly all the purely astronomical instruments are in place and are being adjusted.

This is but one of three stations for "Princess," he said, and without been arranged for by Professor Brown, being conscious of the act, he pos- astronomical director of the Naval Obsessed both her hands in his. "I am servatory. The other two are at Barnesa Norwegian waif, and yet, you love ville and Griffin, Ga. At each of these me. You are a princess of royal places there is a corps of astronomers blood, I love you. It is something from Washington, together with many that our souls have done without our other scientists skilled in what is called knowledge, perhaps in the unremem- astro-physical work. It is these last who bered past before these shells in are now engaged in mounting grating which we live, were made. They and spectroscopes for the purpose of observing, on the day of the eclipse, the spectrum of the light which will come to the earth past the disk of the moon from the atmosphere of glowing vapors surrounding the sun itself.

In this connection two things are of interest to Baltimoreans. One is that all the gratings used in observing the eclipse, bith in this country and abroad, were ruled in the physical laboratory of the Johns Hopkins University, under the direction of Professor Rowland. The other is that Professor Brown recently said in an interview published in New York

A number of the Baltimore observers when you are safe in the palace of have arrived. They are: Prof. Joseph S your father, I will go to you there. Ames, Dr. N. E. Dorsey, Mr. L. E. Jewell, I know not how, nor when; but I Dr. L. S. Mitchell, Mr. M. N. Parsons and will go. Until then, princess, I may Mr. N. E. Gilbert. They found part of their apparatus here, and at once pro-She raised her eyes to his and look- ceeded to get it in place for the work

The Greatest Specialist of the Time in the Treatment of Private Diseases Gives Every Case His Personal Attention. 6 Most doctors have a certain number of stock remedies which they use in all cases which seem at an similar. This is not Dr. Hathaway's method. Every ately and medicines are a ministered which ar or. Hathaway's persua pervision for each ca ame manner, consequer are with him is most care and improved and enlarged upon constantly during the twenty years since—twenty years of the moextensive practice enjoyed by any specialist to this country. Dr. Hathaway's great and uniform success is due to this individual system of treatment. Dr. Pathaway makes ro charge for consultational advice at either his office or by roul.

J. NEWTON HATHAWAY, NI. D. Dr. Hat 'away & Co., 23% South Broad Street, Atlanta, Ga-MENTION THIS PAPER WHEN WRITING

If in Want

For Tobacco, Cotton or Corn,

- WRITE TO

TRAVERS

BRANCH V. C. C. CO.,

Richmond, Virginia.

-: BRANDS:-

Capital Tobacco Fertilizer. National Special Tobacco Fertilises. National Fertilizer. Capital Bone-Potash Compound. Travers' Dissolved Bone Phosphale. Champion Acid Phosphate. Beef Blood and Bone.

Egg Preservine will keep eggs free for any length of time in any mate, and in all seasons. Ask you grocer for it. Wholesale distributors as, Durham, N. C.; W. S. Parker and Co., Henderson, N. C. Egg Preservine is manufactured only by the

VER CO. New York City. 79 and 81 Park Place.

pelled two men, the sole occupants of tle haven of refuge.

One of these men almost a giant in stature, held the tiller and watched with unerring eyes the play of the savage water around them. He knew these waters as the half-grown child knows the doorvard of its birthplace, and he loved the sea, the leaping waves and the rushing wind with a passion that was hereditary. He loved it, and he delighted to defy its dangers. His companion held the sheet rope, which notwithstanding the fact that he had taken two turns around the cleat, was, with each fresh gust of wind, almost snatched from

"We'll make the Devil's Nose, Crad-"and we'll be there in 10 minutes' when I round to into the little bay, jump and swim for your life! She'll there were living things hovering have headway enough to carry her into the neek of the cove, but not a in the rock near the point on the north shore and another at the head of the cove. If you can make one saw his friend put the lantern down; of them, and get a hitch through then his arm was seized in a firm be as safe as a church. Put your ting boulder into the light of day. clasp knife in your teeth, Crad, and if you cannot make one of the rings ashore and wait. I'll ride out the gale alone, and then I'll come back for

I'm captain of this craft." When the sloop was again upon against the rock on which they stood. took me from the sea?"

which of itself did not even tremble. Craddock loved such scenes with name Torgensen.

pointed straight to windward.

away by wind and water.

As she drove onward nearer and he murmured:

rite yacht of the Princess Charlotte of Denmark. God grant that she his feet, and standing before his the sea as we love it. Crad, andlook, for God's sake, look!" He point- "Shall I tell you how it happened, ed with his disengaged hand, and Crad? It seemed when I stood up Craddock saw the figure of a woman | there on the rock, and saw that wave wrapped in a cork jacket, lashed to hang over her, ready to fall and the binnacle of the beleaguered yacht crush, as though I heard her cry which was now not more than 30 alond to me to save her, and I leaped

How I found her I do not know, but At the very instant that the two when I came to the surface she was men discovered her, a mighty wave near to me, and I seemed to leap rolled up over the stern, and broke through the water, impelled by great in mid air, overwhelming the yacht | er strength than I ever possessed be with a flood of water that crushed fore. Then-why, then it seemed as and made a wreck of her before their | if there was no danger, and I remem-For two seconds they gazed spell- put her arms around my neck, and bound upon the scene, and then with- somehow Crad, it seemed as if she felt out a word of warning or intention, the same as I, that the wind and the ward to the water, 50 feet below.

as if petrified, clinging with both would be waiting for us. And all that hands to the rock from which the time she did not speak. I have no wind seemed determined to hurl him; heard the sound of her voice. in twain by the barrier, which shel- and he gazed with every faculty con- daughter of a king, you say, but only centrated in his eyes upon the awful a woman, after all. A woman with scene of wreckage and destruction. a heart-ay, two hearts, for now by The yacht careened over, half filled heaven she possesses mine. The with water and surely foundering, daughter of a king, but only a wo was thrown by the violence of the man. Crad, only a woman." wave that struck her out of line with the Devil's Nose, and almost before from the hatchway, and it was Thor there was time to realize the awful who answered her. She had made no thing that had happened, she had change in her apparel, and seemed to passed beyond his view to leeward. be as unconscious of the wet as her He was dimly conscious that the binnacle and wheel and att the afterrigging of the yacht had been torn he towering over her like a god, and loose and swept away in the vortex, and with them had disappeared the figures of the woman and of the two men who were lashed to the wheel. Then almost directly beneath the a wave, and breasting it with the power of a giant, he saw his friend, did you call my name?" Beyond him, in the trough of the sea, were lost to view. There was no sign of excitement do not mean what is your name. Your in Craddock's face or manner. He friend has told me that. Who are turned with deliberation, passed around the jutting rock into the cavern, found the ship's lantern still burning there, made his way rapidly down and out through the cleft into the open air, thence hurriedly to the water's edge, and in a moment more | man leaped into the sea, but the man he was in the dingey, sculling rapidly past the sloop toward the open sea. When he had reached a certain point beyond which it would have been folly to have ventured, by artfully working his oar, he held the little craft almost stationary, while he, standing upright, shading his eyes with his disengaged hand, gazed eagerly to windward. He seemed also to listen. Presently high above the roar of the wind and waters the in minor key came to him. A moment later he saw the form of his friend swimming toward him with powerful strokes, and clinging to his back, with her arms around his neck, was the cork-jacketed woman of the White and wan and drenched, vet conscious, with something infinitely pathetic in her wonder and amazement, they assisted her along the sloop's deek to the cabin. It was Craddock who entered with her, and from a locker he selected clothing of his own, which he laid out upon the berth; until then there had been on word spoken.

"Madam," he said, pausing beneath the hatch, "do you understand Engby an indentation which Nature had lish?"

She replied with an inclination of her head, and he added, "This is the only dry clothing I can offer you. There is brandy on the table. If there is more that I can do, you have but to call through the hatch." He turned then to leave her, but she de-Seas, mountains high, plume-crested tained him by a gesture.

"There is Between us a Divinity of Love." Craddock's companion leaped upward | waves and the fury of the storm could and outward, and plunged head down- not, dared not, harm us; that the water could not drown us, and I swam Craddock did not move. He stood around the rock, knowing that you

> An hour later she called to them Norwegian savior. It seemed, too, as if they had known each other always she gazing up into his eyes in silent "Princess," he said, "it has pleased God to let me take you from the sea. Tell me, did you call aloud from spot where he stood, on the crest of the deck of the schooner before the mountain of water fell upon you, and

"No," said she, "I could not call another figure appeared. Then both your name. I did not know that any one was near. Who are you, sir? I

"Yesterday if you had asked me that," replied Thor, "I could have answered. Now, I do not know. There was a man upon the rock when your yacht foundered in the storm. That who swam out of the sea with you upon his back is not the same. You madam, are a princess of royal blood. I am a man who never knew his father, and yet there is between us, belonging to both a divinity of love. It is stronger than I or you," and he bent forward and kissed her on the forehead. She made no reply, and she did not resent the salutation. "Ther!" she said, dreamily. "Yes, it is true." And she reached out and strange, weird bar of a yodel song | took his hand, raised it to her lips and kissed it; then she turned back into the cabin and disappeared.

The Norwegian did not change his attitude for many minutes, but at last he strode forward to where Craddock waited at the bow. "The daughter of a king," he said to him. "Craddock, I never cared till now to know who I am. She asked the question and I could not answer.

Will you help me to find out who I am? The daughter of a king, Craddock, but only a woman after all." The storm that had promised to invest that part of the world for three or four days began to lull as the day advanced, so that when the sun was at meridian the fury of it was spent.

A strange unrest abode with Thor, the Norwegian. Many times he drew near to Craddock and paused as if about to speak, then silently withdrew. As many times he strode to the hatchway and seemed to meditate upon entering the cabin, only to health. "Tell me," she demanded, with ner- turn away and stand gazing across There is nothing so deadly uncer mad expostulation to be shattered vous intensity, "who is the man who the water toward the coast of Den-1 and only the unquiet waves told what it had been through the preceding > ing up the system Hood's Sarsaparilla starts you right for a whole year of INTERNATIONAL EGG PRESER-